

Property Taxes and Public Education, Can You Connect the Dots!

From the very beginning of the fiasco created by elected leaders in Texas going back over forty years ago thousands of citizens have tried to connect the dots between property values and education. And the invisible line between these two has not been made by any elected official in the State of Texas. It was the best sales pitches ever put over the taxpayer. The amount of money spent on public education in Texas alone will never be known. It is a number so large the average calculator cannot display it. Hundreds of billions of dollars have been flushed down the public education system over the past five decades in Texas, the proficiency levels of the majority of school children graduating today are well below what they were fifty years ago when the cost of education was much lower per student.

In Texas and in states all across this country homeowners are facing financial turmoil and hardship no one should ever be subjected to. Thousands of homeowner's have lost their most valuable asset their homes, and the trend is climbing by each passing year. Fraud and corruption within central appraisal and school districts across the state have squandered away the wealth of taxpayers for decades and the public record proves it. The fallacy and Ponzi scheme is over now, and taxpayers are exposing the fraud and corruption all across the north central Texas area in multiple school districts. Taxpayers are taking these issues to the courts in Texas and criminal complaints have been submitted to the DOJ and SEC at the federal level. Elected leaders and local government officials including school board officials are being held accountable and lawsuits are underway to bring civil and criminal charges against those involved. Taxpayers are through with the lies and deception by elected leaders at every level and things are getting very interesting in Texas. Leaders in Texas are meeting in Austin in the regular session of the 89th legislative session and many will soon realize just how bad things are in Texas and many will be held accountable for failing to do their job and uphold the rule of law.

Taxation based on market speculation and unrealized gain is illegal and in direct conflict with the rights of citizens as granted in the US Constitution. Rogue elected leaders in Texas will soon face the consequences for their actions and the fraud and corruption they have allowed for decades. Texas is on the brink of a total financial collapse and the word is beginning to get around. Property taxes have to be eliminated immediately or Texas will fall under the weight of the fallout from fraud and corruption allowed for too long in this state.

-Jeff Mashburn, Commonsenselaw.org